In Hinduism, the serpent God is called Shesa and also Vasuki. The Gods Visnu and Shiva are avatars, or personifications, of this serpent God. The serpent Visnu stands upon is Shesa, and is also called Patanjali, meaning "Gift of the Serpent". Visnu is an avatar of Shesa in the official oldest text on the serpent power yoga, though this has been corrupted by the enemy. Vasuki (Shesa) is the serpent that Shiva wears around His neck, and is an avatar of. The descriptions of Shesa/Vasuki are that of the Kundalini energy. It is stated that when Shesa uncoils it, it creates the universal. In Hinduism, this is the serpent power uncoiling in the mula and rising up the spine to the crown. The symbolism is based on the serpent energy.

In ancient Sumeria, a nine-headed serpent symbolized Enki, just as Shesa does in Hinduism. The nine heads are symbols of the nine major chakra points along the spine and in the brain. The color blue of Visnu and Shiva is the color of spiritual energy in the ancient culture.

One of the names of Shesa is "Sat" in Sanskrit. Shesa is used for the number Six, but Sat is also used interchangeably as Six. Sat's full mantra is Satanama. Six is the number of the union that brings about creation, and Satanama is the five elements of creation. Shesa is the energy of creation, which is 666, the number of the energy of the serpent, which was shown as the sun.

Satanama is where the name Satan comes from.
